Evaluate roof damage from the ground. Check for torn, curled, punctured, or missing shingles. Make sure to take photographs of any damage you see.

Assess gutters and windows. Even if your shingles show no obvious signs of damage, gutters and windows can be cracked, which indicate that your roof may also have damage.

Check for signs of hail. It's safer to check for hail damage on the flat ground around your house, rather than getting on the roof. Look closely at your vehicles and decks for signs of high winds or hail.

Inspect ceilings for water damage. A damaged roof can cause a leak that trickles through to an interior ceiling. Go from room to room inside your home, including your attic, and check for signs of leaks.

Contact your insurance company to notify them of damage. Sage works directly with your homeowner's insurance company to help you navigate the ins and outs of insurance language, policies, and inspections.
